Bonwit Teller invites you to plan your fall shoe wardrobe with our own fashion maestro, LEON TOURO, director of our Make-Talk Shoe Salon.

Mr. Touro believes this is the year of the shoe celebre, of shoes as beautiful individualists. And with the new shorter skirt lengths, how important it is for the focal point to be perfectly shod!

THE LEGEND OF THE RAINTREE

The legend of the Raintree is the age old tale of man's quest for the unattainable.

In every time and in every language, poets have sung of it — the primal tree in the Garden of Eden . . . the tree of Apollo bearing jewelled apples in the Hesperides . . . the Golden Raintree of the Orient, transplanted to the heart of frontier America, the tree whose fruit is love, whose flower is fulfillment.

It is the very tree of life to him who finds it. Its ways are ways of pleasantness and its paths all lead to peace, to happiness, to the secret of life itself.

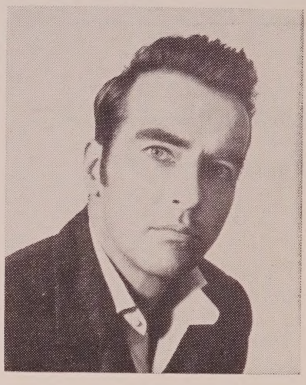
Who's who in the cast



MONTGOMERY CLIFT
(John Wickliff Shawnessy)

Montgomery Clift came to the screen by way of the legitimate stage, first appearing in little theater productions which led him to Broadway where he scored heavily in more than a dozen plays. There followed several screen roles, each adding to his stature as a capable and sensitive performer. The deep sincerity of his acting is fully demonstrated in his portrayal of John Wickliff Shawnessy, the Indiana youth whose search for the legendary Raintree motivates the story of Raintree County.

Seldom if ever before has an actor carried such an individual burden of responsibility for the steady progression of a story on film as did Clift in Raintree County. Appearing in and motivating virtually every scene, the young actor worked 105 days out of the picture's 106-day shooting schedule -- something of a record.

ELIZABETH TAYLOR
(Susanna Drake)

Long a favorite of millions, Elizabeth Taylor began her screen career as a child star in MGM's Lassie Come Home in 1942. Continuing her rise to fame in a series of outstanding performances through the years, she achieves maturity as a great dramatic star in her portrayal of Susanna Drake in Raintree County, a trying role which involves intense emotional strain.

Preparing herself for this demanding part, Miss Taylor devoted months to studying the script. To master the characterization, she spent many long hours in conversation with Marguerite Lamkin, dialect coach for Raintree County, until she had developed to near-perfection the colorful accent of the Old South.

Eva Marie Saint
(Nell Gaither)

The lead in a college play, several years of outstanding work on major radio and television programs, and a co-starring role in a successful Broadway play prepared Eva Marie Saint for her step to screen stardom.

In her very first picture, On the Waterfront, Miss Saint won the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actress of 1954. Since that moment she has been constantly sought by the major studios.

In Raintree County, the fine quality of this lovely young star's acting reaches new heights in her role of Nell Gaither.

NIGEL PATRICK
(Jerusalem Webster Stiles)

In his first American film, British stage and screen star Nigel Patrick falls heir to one of the coveted roles of the year, that of "Perfesser" Jerusalem Webster Stiles, the cynical progressive educator of Raintree County's Pedee Academy.

Starting his career on the London stage, Patrick is now listed as one of England's great actors, having starred in many stage and screen plays in his native land, as well as on the Continent.

Lee Marvin
(Orville "Flash" Perkins)

A World War II Marine combat veteran, Lee Marvin went from summer stock in the Catskills to leading roles on Broadway, television, and eventually to motion pictures where he has turned in several top performances.

The fine quality of his acting really shines in his zestful characterization of Orville "Flash" Perkins, Raintree County's athletic hero.
